

WIDOW NOW FACES
MURDER CHARGE

The La Honda "well" murder case was reopened last Wednesday when Mrs. Minnie Roderick, widow of the slain La Honda rancher, whose body was found at the bottom of an abandoned well on his ranch last month, was rearrested by Sheriff James J. McGrath and charged with murder.

Sheriff McGrath, acting on the request of District Attorney Franklin Swart, went to the home of Antone Fagal, Mrs. Roderick's father, in Woodside, and took the widow into custody.

Mrs. Roderick will be charged jointly with Will Woodring, former employe on the Roderick ranch, who is now in the county jail charged with murdering Roderick.

Mrs. Roderick and Woodring were arraigned jointly on Wednesday before Justice of the Peace Edward I. McAuliffe in Redwood City, and their preliminary hearing was set for Thursday, July 31, at 2 P. M.

In ordering Mrs. Roderick's rearrest, District Attorney Franklin Swart is quoted as saying:

"New evidence gained through the questioning of Woodring and Mrs. Roderick prompted our action today in rearresting Mrs. Roderick and naming her jointly with Woodring in a murder complaint.

"Mrs. Roderick has admitted that she helped in the disposal of her husband's body. She has been unable to explain this and the subsequent move on her part in asking her husband's arrest and applying for divorce. She knew all the while he was dead, but insisted that he had deserted her and her family for another woman.

"She admitted further that her husband was murdered with her gun, and that she was an expert shot with the rifle used to slay the rancher. For some time that she has not yet told the true story, but we released her with a specific plan in mind. I worked, and we are now ready to proceed.

"Mrs. Roderick was very friendly with Woodring, the ranch hand employed by her husband and who we charged with murder on the strength of her story. Woodring, in turn, has accused Mrs. Roderick of doing the killing, and it now looks as though the friendship was sufficiently strained to get at the truth.

"Sheriff McGrath and his staff have done excellent work in this case and deserve high commendation. The sheriff has been of invaluable assistance to us in untangling this case."

Mrs. Roderick is represented by Joseph Bullock. Gilbert Ferrell, Redwood City attorney, is representing Woodring. It is expected that the prosecution will be handled personally by District Attorney Swart, assisted by Edmund Scott and Richard Bell, assistants district attorney.

DALY CITY K. OF C.
HAS BUSY SESSION

Daly City Council No. 2712, K. of C., held their regular meeting in Eagles Hall on Tuesday evening, July 15. Officers of Daly City Council conferred the first degree on a class of six new candidates. Visiting Knights lauded the ceremony in no short terms, but after all such praise is due, for each officer seems to take the utmost pride in perfecting every detail of his charge.

State Warden Dave Supple installed officers of the Council as follows: Chaplain, Rev. James Donohoe; Grand Knight, Thomas Callan; Deputy Grand Knight, Anthony Parmisano; Chancellor, Andrew K. Irving; Warden, Ernest Cuneo; Lecturer, Ernest Mico; Treasurer, William Sweeney, Jr.; Financial Secretary, Benjamin Kost; Recording Secretary, Joseph Patten; Inside Guard, George Campbell, Sr.; Outside Guard, Walter L. Murphy; Trustees, Peter Benassini, William Core, Colman Lee.

Progress was reported by the committee in charge of the Council's picnic, to be staged at Lovchen Gardens, Colma, on Sunday, August 24. Dell's accordion band has been secured for the occasion. W. L. M.

Mr. Shuttleworth passed away after an illness of less than two weeks, in a San Francisco hospital, Saturday, July 19. Funeral services took place from the funeral parlors of Suhr & Wieboldt, Valencia street, last Tuesday at 2 P. M. Interment was at Cypress Lawn Memorial Park.

FALL RACING MEET AT LOCAL TRACK

A recent press dispatch from Agua Caliente, Mexico, announces that "an earlier opening date for the twenty-five day racing met at the Tanforan track at San Bruno may result from the announcement that the Agua Caliente winter meet is practically certain to begin on Thanksgiving day."

"The Tanforan meet opening was planned for November 15. With twenty-five days of running, the meet would end around December 15, thus giving the horse owners about two weeks to prepare for the Agua Caliente inaugural. The Thanksgiving day opening for Caliente, however, will probably mean that Tanforan will advance its meet to October 15, as Tanforan will hardly undertake to conflict with Agua Caliente.

"Judge Joseph A. Murphy, steward at Tanforan, will come to San Francisco as soon as the Chicago season closes, to marshal details for the Tanforan opening."

MCGOVERN CLUB MEMBERS
PLAN CAMPAIGN IN DALY CITY

Plans for the campaign in Daly City were completed at the meeting of the McGovern for Coroner Club held last Saturday at the office of W. C. Lasswell & Co. Many active civic leaders added their names to the ever growing list who are for Dr. McGovern, and each member expressed their desire to do everything possible to secure the highest vote for Dr. McGovern ever given any candidate in Daly City.

Members of the club were assigned to various parts of the city for active work.

The public work of Dr. J. C. McGovern and his association with practically every project for the progress of San Mateo county for the past 27 years was stressed by Luella D. Pepper, manager of W. C. Lasswell & Co., organizer of the club.

The next McGovern for Coroner meeting will be held next Saturday, and reports of the committees will be made and further plans for the campaign will be discussed.

A Welcome Arrival

LOOSE FIELDING
CAUSES DEFEAT

Errors lost a close game for Daly City last Sunday. The Merchants were defeated, 4 to 1, by the O'Brien, Spotorno & Mitchell nine in a six inning game. The contest was a lively mound duel between two cool-headed pitchers, Frank Jester and Al Toole.

Jester allowed the local batters only four hits, while Toole was touched for eight bingles. Two of the poultrymen's safeties were of the infield variety, and two were charged against Al after easy outs resulted in errors.

Both twirlers put up a masterful exhibition of how to get out of trouble. In five of the six innings each team had men on base, and in most cases they were stranded. Toole left nine runners on the sacks, while Jester caused five merchants to walk in for their gloves.

The poultrymen's nine had a big advantage over Daly City in two departments, base running and fielding. The local nine did not give a very good account of itself in either case.

The Merchants will oppose the Gold Bond nine next Sunday. The opponents are considered a tough hurdle for any team to get over. If Daly City wins, they will regain their lost prestige.

CHARGES OF MANSLAUGHTER
AGAINST STELLICK DROPPED

Frank Stellick, charged with manslaughter in the death of Elmer Fitzpatrick, a mechanic, following a brawl at Rockaway Beach, has been released from custody. Stellick appeared before Judge Ellis C. Johnson in Daly City on Monday. The evidence showed that Stellick had received a severe beating about the head and face at the hands of the deceased and a companion, the attack being without the slightest provocation. To protect himself, Stellick picked up a piece of iron lying at his feet and struck Fitzpatrick a blow over the head, causing his death. Stellick had several character witnesses. Following the hearing he was released.

TRAFFIC OFFICERS'
HAZARDOUS JOB

The hazardous character of the California traffic officer's job was evidenced by a report made public last Tuesday by Eugene W. Biscailuz, superintendent of the California Highway Patrol, showing three officers killed and sixty-nine injured in performance of their duty within the last eighteen months.

Two of the fatalities occurred in the Kern county squad, Officers Howard C. Garlinger and L. W. Hogan dying in highway crashes. The third was Officer Leland Bond of San Mateo county.

The sixty-nine counted as injured included only those who were off duty long enough to draw compensation, and does not include scores of sprained legs, battered hands, lacerated faces, etc., which traffic officers come to regard as a part of the daily grind of watching the roads.

Biscailuz said many of the injuries are of an extremely serious nature, one officer having been off duty for eighteen months. Broken legs and arms, incurred in dashes after speed-maddened motorists, are of frequent occurrence.

The average number of men killed annually is three, while the number killed or seriously hurt over a period of years has been close to 25 per cent of the entire personnel of the patrol, Biscailuz said.

Traffic officers find it difficult to secure life insurance, except at exorbitant rates, because of the extremely high hazard involved. Through an arrangement worked out with the state compensation insurance fund, however, injured officers received $25 a week after the first week while off duty and the families of officers killed on duty receive a like amount until the sum of $5,000 has been paid.

In addition, the officers have protected themselves to a certain degree by benefit funds set up by their own associations.

In the hope of minimizing the death toll in the patrol, orders have been given that motorcycles be discarded for automobiles by men operating on night patrols or in wet weather.

PAY VISIT TO YOSEMITE PARK

Mrs. Juanita Jorgensen and children, Harold and Mary Lou, have returned from a five day trip to the Yosemite National Park, as the guests of Miss Mary Dawson, of San Francisco. Both ladies returned with their full quota of tan and woods stories, and many pictures, such as tourists must take on such trips. We only hope that Mrs. Jorgensen and Miss Dawson did not have to work too hard putting up their tents by themselves. They expressed great amazement at the few casualties seen along such roads at this time of the year, when there is so much traveling by tourists.

TWO STILL SEIZED IN COASTSIDE RAID

Two men were arrested and a large still seized by federal prohibition officers in a raid on a ranch near Half Moon Bay this week.

The raid was made on the Ernest Consani ranch, where Giricilano Giricilani and Daniel Duli were arrested. The officers are reported to have found a 500-gallon still in operation on the ranch and to have seized more than 200 gallons of liquor and 15,000 gallons of mash.

At Miramar a 300-gallon still was discovered by the prohibition agents and was seized. As no one was at the latter still at the time of the raid, no arrests were made.

QUIZ ORDERED IN FIRE WARDEN ROW

Accusing County Fire Warden Bert Werder of "malicious conduct," Dr. Ralph B. Scheier, Hillsborough physician and owner of the Canyon sanatorium at Woodside, appeared before the San Mateo county board of supervisors last Monday, and asked that Werder be severely reprimanded. Dr. Scheier based his charges on a dispute he said he had with Werder during and after a fire near the sanatorium.

Werder also appeared before the board, denied the physician's charges and told the board that the sanatorium was nothing but a dangerous fire trap. Dr. Scheier said that Werder had damaged his institution by giving out reports to the press that the sanatorium was a fire trap and a hazard to the patients housed there.

The fire warden did not deny that he gave out this information and insisted that it was true. After heated discussion Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey recommended that a committee be named to investigate both Dr. Scheier's and Werder's charges.

The committee consists of Supervisors Hickey, John Poole and Rosalie M. Brown. This committee will ask Fire Chiefs Wilkie Dessin, Burlingame; Hugh Morris, San Mateo, and Edward Wheeler, San Carlos, to accompany them on an investigation of the Canyon Sanatorium. They will report at the next meeting of the board.

EXPLODING BOILER
KILLS PLANT OWNER

The explosion of a boiler at a South San Francisco plant Saturday night resulted in the death of Hans Haedler, aged 41, part owner of the plant. The exploding took place at the plant of the Pacific Oil By-Products Company when a boiler in which cocoa butter was being extracted from copra exploded.

Haedler, who was tending the boiler, was hurled over the top of a passing Southern Pacific train, and fell into the yard of the Pacific Coast Steel Company several hundred yards away, being killed instantly. Henry Odeen, another partner in the plant, was seriously burned as a result of the explosion. He was saved from death by the fact that he was in another part of the building when the explosion took place.

COUNTY RECEIVES
$422,284 FOR SCHOOLS

San Mateo county will receive the sum of $422,284 from the state as its annual apportionment for support of elementary and high schools and junior colleges, according to a statement by Vierling Kersey, superintendent of public instruction.

The state will allot $27,390,836 for school support throughout the fifty-eight counties of California, an increase of $809,249 over the allotment for last year, Kersey said.

"This sum of twenty-seven million dollars seems insignificant compared to approximately $160,000,000 which the state school system costs," Kersey declared.

EAGLES THEATRE PARTY
ARRANGEMENTS COMPLETED

All the necessary details for the big show to be given by the Eagles of Daly City on Wednesday, July 30, at the State Theatre, are now completed. The theatre party will be assured of a large attendance. Two complete shows will be presented on July 30, the first starting at 7 P. M., sharp, and the second at 9:30 P. M. Bring the children to the first show and avoid the jam. The show will be featured by four up to the minute, high class, entertaining vaudeville acts.

The talking picture will be such as will send you home in a happy mood. In presenting this show to the public the Eagles of Daly City have spared no effort to please the public.

Reserve this date, Wednesday, July 30, and visit the New State Theatre for a pleasant evening's entertainment. Invite your friends and neighbors to go with you. Owing to the fact that the repairs of the Daly City Theatre are not nearly completed, it was necessary to hold the show at the State Theatre. The management of the State Theatre has announced that every one attending will be well cared for.

The committee in charge of this big event is working faithfully to make it an immense success. Next Saturday a thirty-four page program will be delivered to every house in Daly City and Colma and the district adjoining the State Theatre. Look this program over carefully. Read the program and know what you may expect to see and hear.

WORK BEGINS ON HOSPITAL WING

Construction of the new east wing of the Community hospital at Beresford was started last Monday, morning it was revealed by Architect Will H. Toepke of San Mateo, when he appeared before the board of supervisors at its meeting.

Remaining contracts for the hospital building were let by the supervisors. Scott company was given the steam-heating and ventilation award on a bid of $19,904. It had promised to use local labor as much as possible, according to William Logue of San Mateo. Pacific Elevator company was given the elevator award with a bid of $6,530.

Commendation of the supervisors in letting contracts to local firms was contained in two communications received. They were from the San Mateo-Burlingame Merchants association and the San Mateo Chamber of Commerce. They also backed the stand of the supervisors that contractors use local labor as far as possible.

Soft drink licenses were granted Ruby Birdsall, Menlo Park; Thomas Heaney, Redwood City; Olive Riley, Visitation; Walter Jellick, Portola; H. E. Schimmel, Menlo Park; G. H. Morehouse, San Bruno; and E. T. Lile, Menlo Park.

Upon the motion of Supervisor Hickey, the permit of Casimiro Galuzzo of Salada Beach was revoked. The supervisor accused Galuzzo of using his soft drink license primarily as a liquor permit.

George W. Hall, superintendent of the San Mateo grammar schools, was reappointed to the San Mateo county board of education.

Hearing of protests on the formation of the Milbrae Park lighting district was continued two weeks.

Application of fifty residents of Beresford to hold an election to dissolve the Beresford lighting district was referred to District Attorney Swart. The residents stated the district was no longer needed, as they had been annexed to San Mateo.

Hearing of protests on an application to close streets at Edgemar was set for August 4.

A resolution approving Harbor boulevard, a proposed railroad crossing at Belmont, was passed. The street is planned by the Harbor Development Company. A sum of $5,060 has been placed with the railroad commission to defray the costs, according to Attorney C. N. Kirkbride.

THREE MEET DEATH;
THIRTY ARE INJURED

Three dead, thirty injured and two men in jail turned out to be the San Mateo county toll of the most disastrous week end in Northern California since summer touring filled the highways to overflowing.

Only two of the deaths, however, were on the highway. They were Evelyn Nelson, 15-year-old San Francisco school girl, who was killed at El Camino Real and Ninth avenue, San Mateo, Sunday night when the automobile in which she was a passenger turned over after a collision. Eleven others were hurt in the crash and C. E. Anderson, of San Francisco, executive of the Sperry Flour Company, was arrested on a charge of manslaughter. Later he was released on bail.

The second death was that of an unidentified man believed to have been the victim of a hit-runner on the Bayside boulevard. His body, the head terribly crushed, was found at 4 o'clock Monday morning just north of Monte Diablo in the city limits of San Mateo.

A third death was that of Hans Haedler, of South San Francisco, who was killed when a boiler in his vegetable oil plant blew up late Saturday afternoon.

EAGLES ARE PREPARING FOR GRAND CONVENTION

The members of Colma-Vista Grande Aerie who attended the Associated Aerie meeting held in San Mateo last Tuesday night were William Bolger, Charles Rodenberger, Joseph Bolger, Lawrence Shaw, B. J. Adams and Emil Nessier.

The Associated Aeries are going to have a "flower basket" as a float in the Grand Aerie convention parade on August 14. They are also establishing headquarters at the Whitcomb Hotel, Market and Eight streets, San Francisco during convention week. They will hold open house for all Eagles and their families and friends during the convention.

San Mateo county expects to be well represented in the parade, which will be one of the largest and grandest in the history of the order.

ODDS AND ENDS OF WEEK'S NEWS

Fourteen Chinese and one white man face trial on violation of the San Mateo county gambling act because of their arrest Saturday night at Visitacion valley by a posse headed by Sheriff James J. McGrath.

Two young and dapper auto bandits of the sheik type held up the Oak Tree Inn, San Mateo, shortly after 10 o'clock Saturday night and took $20 from a cash register in the candy department.

Mrs. Mary Donald Ross, one of the most prominent women residents of the peninsula, and the mother of Attorneys Hall C. and Lee T. Ross, of Redwood City and San Mateo, passed away at her home in San Mateo early Tuesday morning. Mrs. Ross was the widow of the late George C. Ross, pioneer attorney of San Mateo county.

Marie Kullander, Montara Inn, Montara, was fined $100 when found guilty of violating the national prohibition law when her case came up in the United States district court last Saturday.

Almon E. Roth, controller of Stanford University, who was elected president of Rotary International at the Chicago convention last month, will sail for Vienna next month to arrange for the 1931 world convention there next June.

Mr. and Mrs. Claude Sabourin, of Vallejo, met death in an automobile accident near Lamoine, their 8-year-old son escaping with a broken arm and cuts and bruises.

The long awaited decision on when and where a bridge will be constructed connecting San Francisco and Alameda counties will be known within a week, according to the announcement of Mark L. Requa, chairman of the Federal and State Bay Bridge Commission, as that body went into session to examine the engineers' findings.

Ten thousand picnic lovers will assemble at Fairfax Park, Marin county, August 3, to celebrate the thirty-first annual reunion of members of the Veteran Firemen's Association of San Francisco.

J. A. Palmer, 62, president of the Bert Manufacturing Company of Akron, Ohio, was seriously injured at Burlingame when he was struck by an automobile while crossing the State highway.

Night baseball seems to have made a hit in the Pacific Coast league. Three of the four series played this week, in Los Angeles, Portland and Seattle, were played under the electric lights.

Four Filipinos received injuries which may prove fatal when the automobile in which they were riding swerved off the highway and crashed into a tree near San Bruno.

George F. Buck, presiding judge of the San Joaquin county Superior Court, died at Stockton last Sunday night after a long illness. He had been sixteen years on the Superior Court bench.

SHERIFF'S POPULARITY IS INCREASING DAILY

Hundreds of voters are flocking to the standard of Sheriff James J. McGrath every day, and as election day grows near his triumph appears all the more certain. All elements of the community are rallying to the support of the able and altogether efficient official. Popular "Jim" is being bombarded with offers of friendly assistance and no stone is being left unturned to bring out a big vote on August 26.

"Jim" McGrath has been a busy man these last few weeks with plenty of the county's business to keep him occupied. Loyal supporters have been persevering in his behalf, and at the odd moments when he is not working on the solution of a more or less deep mystery, have made full reports to him as to the progress of the campaign. He can not feel otherwise than confident of the outcome of the primary.

The vote at the primary should be conclusive. Sheriff "Jim" has been in his present position for a period of sufficient length to qualify in every way for staying there. Affability and the strength required on occasion are possessed in a high degree, and it would take a long search over a wide area to find his equal.

He is a capable, proven public official. We could not ask for more. A quiet, mild-mannered man, he is peculiarly suited for the problems that come up in the office of Sheriff.

The Sheriff has grown up in this rapidly expanding community, and never has there been a man go before the people that merited their suffrage as does James J. Those initials in themselves may be taken as indication of the power back of his pleasing personality. "James J." has a fighting sound to it, and a fighter at times your Sheriff should be.

Administration of the office occupied by our own James J. McGrath is no small matter in itself. That everything is running along smoothly was shown the other day by a visit to Redwood City. All was well ordered activity in the office across the street from the Court House, and at the same time extreme courtesy was manifested toward citizens who happen to put in an appearance.

San Mateo county is indeed fortunate in having such a man as James J. McGrath at the helm in the Sheriff's office.

MULE VS. MOTOR

According to a recent bulletin by the Department of Agriculture, the average cost of power from work animals on farms, as shown by a farm power survey, is 28 cents per horsepower-hour. The cost from tractors is 8 cents.

Taking these figures as a basis for comparison with the cost of electricity, the rural division of the Alabama Power Company asserts that during the past year its 22,000 rural customers have paid an average of only 4.6 cents per kilowatt-hour, which is the equivalent of about 3.6 cents per horsepower-hour, for the energy used by them.

These rural customers used nearly 16 million horsepower-hours of electricity last year, so that an equivalent amount if furnished by horses and mules would have cost them three and a half million dollars more than they actually paid. The same amount of power from tractors would have cost about $800,000 more than the total of their electric bills.

This would seem to indicate that rural electrification has progressed to the point where its economy for farmers can no longer be questioned.

WIFE SOLD AT A PROFIT

Few of the present generation, particularly in the North, know that before the Civil War a great many negroes in the South owned other negroes as slaves. Some interesting facts concerning the subject are given in Prof. Carter Goodwin Woodson's book, "Free Negro Heads of Families."

He shows that as far back as 1830 one-seventh of the negroes in the country were free, some of them rich, owning large plantations and other valuable property. In 1857 one negro in South Carolina owned 200 slaves, in Louisiana four negroes owned respectively 91, 89, 50 and 47 slaves. Many others owned smaller numbers, it being estimated that 40,000 free negroes owned nearly 100,000 slaves at one time.

The story is told of a Charleston negro who admired a female slave owned by a neighbor and bought her for a wife. Later on, when she had failed to behave herself as he thought proper, he sold her at a profit of $50.

Most foreign nations think Congress saw its duties and rather overdid them.

RELIEF FROM CURSE OF CONSTIPATION

A Battle Creek physician says, "Constipation is responsible for more misery than any other cause."

But immediate relief has been found. A tablet called Rexall Orderlies has been discovered. This tablet attracts water from the system into the lazy, dry, evacuating bowel called the colon. The water loosens the dry food waste and causes a gentle, thorough, natural movement without forming a habit or ever increasing the dose.

Stop suffering from constipation. Chew a Rexall Orderlie at night. Next day bright. Get 24 for 25c today at the nearest Rexall Drug Store. Edwards' Drug Store, Mission street, near San Jose avenue. —Adv.

Beggars Can Choose

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist. Her sister, Lillian, urges her to break off the affair, but Ernestine refuses. The love-making progresses rapidly and Ernestine consents to marry Will.

"They'll think I've persuaded you. They'll think I want the money, that I'm seeking for myself," he protested. "If I thought you could live on what I make—but you don't know anything about money. You don't know how hard it is for two people—living on twenty-five dollars a week. I don't know what to do, but I want to do what's right."

He looked most forlorn sitting there, thinking, pondering, trying to contemplate a future without her, trying to reconcile his own pride and self-esteem with the position her family put him into.

"I should never have kissed you," he exclaimed. "I should never have loved you."

"Will," said Ernestine tenderly, "you couldn't help that."

For now his sad confusion had caught her in the grip of her first passion. Now she lived in terrible fulfillment the promise her throbbing heart had made weeks ago, when she had talked to Lillian about marriage. Her heart leaped in her like a thing threatened with mortal danger. She flung herself upon him precipitously, her arms strained round his neck. He caught her and held her close. All his being flared up in answer to her own emotion, and his lips sprang to hers in a kiss that was as new to them as though they had never touched each other before. It was a promise.

"Take me today, Will," she cried, and tears streamed down her face. "Now, quickly, before anybody can say a word to us, before they can be reasonable and reassuring and competent about us. Take me and hold me, now, quickly and secretly. I promise you I'll live on what you earn. I promise I'll take my chance with you—completely. I'll never let them have reason to say that you wanted anything but me. Whatever you have is all I'll have, Will. I promise—"

She was crying wildly. He was shaking, as she was, but he laughed a little, and wiped her cheeks with his own clean handkerchief.

"The lady promises, Judge," he said, and kissed her and laughed at her and teased her. "The lady promises never to sue me for more than a million a year alimony. The lady promises—"

He picked her up and set her on her feet.

"Come on, then—let's do it now," he cried, and seized her wrist and ran, pulling her along.

It was almost evening when Will and Ernestine came to the Briceland house. In the downstairs drawing room the lamps glowed softly. She had telephoned mamma that she was in town for lunch and would come out with Will at five. Beyond Lillian, Ernestine could see Loring's square shoulders.

They ran up the steps, hand in hand, and at the door Will gave her a reassuring hug and kissed her cheek.

"Let me do the talking," he whispered, and they went on into the hall and ran into the drawing and living room. Ernestine was aware at once that the swift kiss Will had imprinted on her cheek had been seen, for papa was flustered and hostile, and mamma looked at her in pale reproach.

"Mamma," said Ernestine, "do you remember Will Todd?"

Mamma gave Will her hand, and he moved awkwardly forward, looking shabby and ill at ease beside the magnificence and self-possession of papa and Loring.

"We've just been talking about you," mamma said to Will. "I didn't know until yesterday that you were such friends with my little girl. I'm sorry you haven't been here sooner."

Will murmured something, and Ernestine introduced him to her grandmother, who looked at him severely and gave a slight snort of recognition, and then Lillian came and offered him her hand and said she remembered him. The two men straddling the hearth acknowledged the introduction with silent handshakes. Mamma asked Will to sit down and rang for tea. Ernestine, full of guilt, sat down close beside him and turned to speak to mamma.

The conversation moved haltingly as they waited for tea. Papa, somewhat maliciously, asked Will about his father.

"He's well," Will answered in a calm natural voice. "But my mother has been almost an invalid for a year now. We feel very anxious about her."

"We are sorry to learn that," said mamma, and then went on quickly: "What have you two children been doing all day?"

"There was a dramatic pause, but Ernestine took it up quickly. "Mamma you forget that I am twenty now."

They laughed politely. The tea-wagon came, mamma poured tea for them all, and they talked of things about which Will knew nothing. Ernestine could see how they were making him feel like an outsider. Sitting in the deep chair, his long legs drawn up before him, Will was not so disturbing. Her heart was full of tender loyalty.

"You have changed a great deal," mamma said to Will. "You used to be a shy little boy."

"I don't feel very shy today," he told her, and smiled at Ernestine.

His bright black eyes, like shiny bits of anthracite, under his white, domelike forehead, were beautiful, but Ernestine knew that the others could see nothing but his queer clothes.

"Tell them, Will," she said at last, putting down her cup and taking his from him.

They all stopped, and turned startled faces toward the two. Will squared himself and turned first to mamma.

"We've gone and done it," he said, smiling.

"Gone and done what?" asked mamma sharply, and her pallor startled them all.

"We've gone and got married—to-day."

"Married! Who?"

It was papa's voice, harsh, protesting.

"Ernestine and I," answered Will steadily, and Loring said, "Married!" in a hoarse, incredulous tone, and Ernestine, looking up, saw his face, as pale as mamma's, and as startled, with deep chagrin and consternation written on it. But none of the others noticed him.

"You see," said Ernestine gently, "we were engaged anyhow, and when mamma invited Will to tea, today, I thought we might just as well make it an announcement party."

"You thought?"

"Certainly, papa. It was my idea."

"Not at all," said Will quickly.

"But anyhow, we are married. I know this strikes you suddenly, sir, but we just decided in haste, and as we want nothing but your blessing—"

"Be still!" exclaimed papa passionately, and he turned to Ernestine. "Where were you married? By whom?"

Will took the conversation into his own hands with deliberation.

"We went to town about noon, went to the courthouse and got our license, then to a jeweler and bought the ring and waited while it was engraved."

Ernestine held up her slim hand, and showed the astonishing gold band on her third finger. "Then we took a taxi out to my mother's house, got her and went to the church I was reared in, in Avondale, and were married."

"But why this mad haste?" spluttered papa, who was almost incoherent. "Ernestine," turning to his daughter, in renewed determination to have nothing to do with Will, "what's got into you? I am sure you have been under some dreadful influence. I can't understand how you could act this way. I can't believe it."

He was furious, he was undone, but he still had a note of command in his voice. Ernestine felt his strength with terror.

"Papa—" she began, but Will cut in resolutely, so that in spite of papa's determination to talk to Ernestine the situation narrowed itself constantly to papa and Will.

"Ernestine was afraid, sir, that you might try to separate us. My own instinct in the matter was that we should talk this over with you, but I see, now, that she was right. You must understand, sir, that we are married, and your objections are futile."

"Ernestine had reason to fear me," papa said in a voice none of them had ever heard from him before. Ernestine felt herself shrivel under it. Papa had no intention of considering himself futile.

"She had reason to fear me, and so had you. I suspect your fear was more important than her own. Even if she were a fool, you might have been decent about it. I have no intention whatever of letting her go away from here with you. You'll learn, sir, that there are such things as annulments, even as divorce. Just because she has made one foolish mistake, is no reason why I should let her ruin her whole life. You have behaved very badly, but your behavior ends here and now. Ernestine stays here. You may go, and I will deal with you outside the house."

Ernestine felt that everything was lost, but Will only laughed. If papa were new and strange, so was her young husband, for he seemed to glow, to fill out, to be bigger and stronger.

"Don't be silly," he said. "Ernestine is of age. She married me of her own free will, and if you tried any such stunts, she would say so. Our marriage is entirely legal. It stands before everything else. She is now my wife, and my home is her home, and you can't detain her."

"We'll see," said papa grimly, and then mamma broke in.

"You shouldn't have, Ernestine. Your shouldn't have run off and got married, without telling mamma. It's the biggest, the most important thing in your life—and to take such a step without your people knowing it! I can't bear to think you'd go off and be married—and not tell me."

"I'm sorry, mamma," said Ernestine in distress, and papa took things up again. He had made a decision.

"Go to your room, Ernestine," he said in a voice of stern command, "and stay there until I can talk to you. If you ladies will excuse us, we will settle this among ourselves. Do you hear me?" he said sharply, turning his furious eyes upon Ernestine. She faltered, half turned to go in automatic command, for papa had always ruled his home, without much effort, but Will put his hand on her arm.

"Stay here, Ernestine," he said in a low voice, and she paused, undecided, while mamma and Lillian seemed to be grouped together on the other side of the room.

"I can understand your distress, sir," said Will. "I can see just how you feel about this, not knowing me at all and not understanding my motives. But you exceed your authority. If you should detain Ernestine here by force, I have only to go out and get the nearest policeman and come back for her. You can't do it."

There was a moment of incredulous silence, and papa half turned to Loring, in appeal, and Loring said in a low tone, "He's right."

Will followed this advantage swiftly. "After all, what have you against me, except you think I may want Ernestine's money? We have decided to do without that. I'm not a stranger to you. You've known my father for thirty years. You know my people, that they are honorable and decent. There's no reason at all why I shouldn't make any marriage I choose, even with Ernestine. I'm working. I can take care of her."

Papa raised his clenched fist above his head, as though he would strike Will, and Ernestine made a little moan and mamma screamed. But Loring put his hand on papa's arm, and drew him back. And in that moment Lillian went to Ernestine and put her arms around her and kissed her.

"Oh, Lill!" Ernestine cried, and burst into terrible tears. "Papa, papa," she cried, turning from Lillian to her father, and holding out her hands, "don't quarrel with us. I can't bear it. I love Will. I wanted to marry him. Let us go ahead with our own married life, now, but don't quarrel with us."

"It's you who have broken faith," said papa. "Not your mother and I. You've put this stranger before us. You can't have both."

Ernestine was appalled.

"You mean that I can't come home?" Papa attained a grim smile.

"That's what I mean," he said, but now mamma broke in hysterically.

"I won't be separated from Ernestine. I won't permit it," she cried, and went to her younger daughter and took her in her arms. "Darling, you can come home as long as mamma lives here. I will see you every day. It's dreadful. It's hard on all of us, and it will be terrible for you. But mamma will not let her little girl go away like this."

"Elaine!" said papa, but she turned to him, as full of anger as he.

"The child is married," she exclaimed. "She may have made a mistake, but if she has, it is only a reason for standing by her. This is my home, as well as yours. I won't be instructed to let my little girl go out friendless. You may do what you like with me, and send me away, too, if you can, but I am going to see Ernestine. I am going to have her here."

Of course papa was helpless, and he said so with a shrug.

"Mamma," said Ernestine, "I am willing to take the responsibility for my marriage. After all, it's I who married Will."

"Not you alone," said mamma vigorously. "The whole family has married him, and we may as well realize it. For nobody marries just one of the Bricelands. We are all going to stand together, always. Papa, we will have to make the best of it. The marriage will have to stand."

Papa would not look at her, nor answer.

"We'll have to go," said Will.

"Goodby, darling," said mamma, and embraced her. "I'll see you soon."

"Goodby, papa," Ernestine faltered, but papa held his stubborn attitude.

"I'll have to go upstairs and get some things," murmured Ernestine, as they went into the hall.

Lillian went upstairs with Ernestine. Mamma came out and put her hand on Will's arm.

"Be good to her," she implored.

"If you can't take care of her, if she's not happy, let her come back."

"I will, Mrs. Briceland," he said soberly. "I appreciate what you have done."

Mamma went afresh.

"It is hard for her father. He worships her. You must understand him. It is a terrible blow to him. He will come around."

The girls came down the stairs, and after a moment Ernestine and Will were out in the dark street again, with her small dressing case in Will's hands. The family stood about in the living room in stricken silence.

The silence lasted for some moments, then Mrs. Briceland turned to her husband.

"You should never have let her go off like that," she said reproachfully. "What will she do?"

"I had no intention of letting her go, if you hadn't interfered," he exclaimed. "I was only threatening her with the loss of the family, in order to get her to stay here—to gain a little time."

"She wouldn't have done it," said Lillian. "She's too crazy about him. It probably was her idea that they get married first. She meant it. You couldn't have kept her."

"How much do you suppose he earns, on the Sun?" asked mamma, and Loring answered:

"Probably anywhere from twenty-five to forty dollars a week."

At that papa threw up his hands in a gesture of despair and turned to leave the room, but he looked back at his wife darkly.

"If you had stood by me," he said to her, "if we had all stood together, we could have held her here. You went back on me, both you and Lillian. It gave them courage. Now, you can think of her, God knows where, with that upstart." He went into the hall, and mamma followed him, her bright persistent voice coming down the stairs:

"You shouldn't have let them go. We might have kept them both here, and taken care of them. Lewis, you'll have to make up your mind to give in, and get him a better job—"

The voices trailed off, and an upstairs door closed upon them. Grandmother went stiffly out of the room, Lillian began to move about the room, satisfying her need for order by pushing the chairs in place, straightening the pillows and moving the things on the table. Loring stood by the fire, staring into it, his face flushed, one hand opening and closing nervously.

Lillian came and spoke to him in a voice which was already like mamma's.

"I'm sorry you got into this," she said. "It's terrible. How can Ernestine act that way? She's the most haphazard thing. But this is the worst yet. I feel as though she had ruined herself. But you aren't going to be angry with her, are you, Loring?"

"No," he said. "No, I won't be angry with her. Your mother's right. The family must stand by her."

Lillian shuddered a little.

"It seems dreadful to me," she said. "Ernestine out somewhere in Chicago, with that man. I don't see how she can be crazy about him in the first place, and how she could have married him in the second."

Loring reached out his hand and ran his fingers down the crepe sleeve of her dress, caught her fingers and held them in his own.

"Would you do that much," he asked wistfully, "if you cared for a man? Would you defy everything for him?"

"I don't know," said Lillian honestly. "I don't know. I want things nice. I want some plan and arrangement to my life."

"But if the man you cared for was not—eligible," he persisted, "would you marry him anyhow?"

"It's not a fair question," protested Lillian, and then added softly: "I don't know what I would do. Because I've cared for only one man, and he has been eligible in every way. So I can't imagine how I would act under other circumstances."

There was a little silence, and then he said, in a stifled voice:

"Is it I, Lillian?"

She looked up at him, and his face was full of suffering. Her own was compassionate.

"Did you care for Ernestine, Loring?"

Defy Passing Years by Right Way of Thinking

But why look old? That, says some one, is all nonsense. But is it? They do say we are as old as we feel. And that's about the truth of it. Of course, we change as time passes. That must be admitted. Yet the change need not be at so rapid a rate.

Even then, we ought to show the change very much less than we do. You know the gentle shock we sometimes get when we run across a person we haven't seen for years. There is a definite, a marked change in him. It depresses us; because our thoughts immediately turn to ourselves.

Many grow old, as we all know, long before their years. The face is a remarkable index to the mind. If there is a lack of faith, or control, sure enough we shall show it in our eyes, our lines, the poise of our head —even our hands. Many people add to the diseases of the mind such other things as gloom, discontent, pessimism, fear.

Beauty, we are always told, is only skin deep. Beauty—real beauty—is soul deep. Once we get the right way of thinking, we shall never look old.—London Tit-Bits.

Curse on Contract Breakers
Cases of real-estate purchasers failing to complete the contract under which they bought property were rare in the days of ancient Egypt, Babylon or Assyria, because they dreaded the consequences promised in the contract to the purchaser who would break it. The curse of Ninib, king of heaven and earth; of Shur, the sun god, and of Gula and Adad were but few of the afflictions assured the one who wedged out of a deal. These things were written into the contract, so that there may be no mistaking the importance of the transaction.

Noah Webster has been called "a born definer of words." Most of the definitions of the 70,000 or more words in his dictionary were created anew by Webster.

ing?" she asked him, but he shook himself quickly.

"No, no!" he exclaimed. "Not—that way. I'm fond of her. She's been like a little sister to me, always. But it's you I care for. It's you I want for my wife. Is it possible that you care for me, Lillian?"

"I always have," she answered simply, and he stared down at her, and again his voice was queer and strained. "I'm like Ernestine," he said, "what I want is love."

She put up her fair sweet face, and he kissed her placid lips.

"I love you, Loring," she assured him, and he took her roughly into his arms.

"You hurt me," she complained in a moment, and he released her and stood holding her hand gently.

"I want love," he said again with poignancy, and Lillian assured him in her quick bright voice that she loved him.

CHAPTER III

Strange Country

It seemed a natural thing to Ernestine, however it seemed to the others, to wake on her marriage morning, in the little back bedroom of the tiny house where the Todds had lived all their married life. She was instantly wide awake and oriented. Perhaps it was the close tangle of Will's arms about her that made everything normal. Perhaps the delicious consciousness of new happiness had never entirely been lost in sleep. It did not matter at all about the family now.

Thinking of everything, Ernestine felt in her heart something new about Will. Added to her romantic love for him was something really more wonderful: a sound thing—respect. He had behaved admirably.

She was filled with a transport of tenderness, a strong conviction of having done well. Now, at last, life had begun for her. The chrysalis of girlhood was broken, and she was emerged into womanhood. She had become real. Always now, Will would be here beside her at the beginning of every day. Gravely she considered this, and sent up a wordless prayer that she might be a good wife.

Some one was moving about in the kitchen, and she heard the rattle of coats in the kitchen grate. How close and small the house was. Each sound came through the thin walls distinctly. Ernestine realized that she would have to close the window, and she essayed to rise. But at the first movement Will's arms tightened about her, though he did not waken. Ernestine extricated herself and got up with a swift strong movement.

"You have to work today, Will," she said in such a wifely tone that he laughed and looked up at her adoringly.

"I suppose now I've got somebody even worse than my mother about making me get up," he said, and then added, "Hey, wait, I'll get you some warm water," for Ernestine was washing her face in the basin that stood on a small washstand near the door.

But the water out of the pitcher, which had stood all night with the cold wind blowing through the open window upon it, was cold and invigorating.

Will shaved in the kitchen, and Ernestine could hear his voice, in an affectionate murmur, talking to some one. Before the small wavy mirror, she applied her make-up, looking at herself sharply. She arranged her sleek soft hair, proud of its thickness and texture. What was there in her face? Was she different this morning? She must not be different. She powdered again, and rubbed some of the scarlet off her lips, which were as red as cherries under the lip salve.

She made the bed neatly and set the room in order, packed up her belongings. The smell of coffee and the sound of the percolator made her feel faint. She had eaten nothing the evening before.

In the kitchen, Will's face turned on her, as bright as a triangular mirror with the sun on it. His mother was sitting by the kitchen table, with a warm shawl over her heavy dress. She could be up at times, and this morning she had made the effort. Ernestine went to Will's mother, and kissed her.

THE HUMAN TORCH

A blow torch in the hands of a mechanic working on a car in front of a garage suddenly exploded and the flames quickly enveloped the man's clothes. Terrified and crying out in pain he ran to the home of a neighbor who endeavored to beat out the flame with her hands. As a result the fire was communicated to her clothing and to her house; she was burned, her home was damaged, and the mechanic was terribly scarred. Incidentally, two automobiles were destroyed.

When clothing catches fire, according to literature published by the National Board of Fire Underwriters, one should get down on the ground or the floor and roll, in an attempt to smother the flames. If possible, wrap a rug or other woolen material around the body, starting at the neck, to avoid inhaling the flame. When one remains standing he soon becomes a living torch, as the flames spread quickest in this position. Running is still worse, as that fans the fire to greater intensity.

The National Board's literature is widely distributed in an effort to reduce the suffering and losses from fire. Approximately 6,000 people die annually as a result of fires in homes, 31 per cent of the victims being women and children. Fire occurs in an American home every two minutes in the year, on the average.

No further incentive should be necessary to urge the American people to protect their homes and families from the ravages of fire.

The Pathfinder suggests that with the adjournment of Congress it will be easier to make Washington a "model dry city."

Even if one could fool all the people all the time, it wouldn't be necessary, with so many willing to fool themselves.

INCREASED SAVINGS

In an editorial in the State Banking Department Bulletin, Will C. Wood, state superintendent of banks, says:

"Many people who have been putting their savings into stocks and other types of investments during the last three or four years are coming back to the banks with renewed appreciation of the value of these conservative institutions. During the quarter beginning January 1, 1930, savings deposits in California state banks alone increased over $12,000,000 and thousands of new savings accounts were opened. These people have found that the saving way is, after all, the safest way to build up funds. They no longer believe they are living in a new era when the old economic laws have been abolished. They now realize that for the average man or woman the savings bank offers safety of principal coupled with a reasonable return in the way of interest."

"Between 1919 and 1929, there had been a reversal of attitude toward savings banks. Whereas in 1919, 75 per cent of the people's free savings went into savings banks, life insurance and realty loans, and only 25 per cent into other types of investment, the percentages for 1929 were only 25 per cent for savings banks, life insurance and realty loans, and 75 per cent for other forms of investment. This specialization of investment for savings was in large part responsible for the break last fall. We can not continue to put so large a proportion of our savings into stocks and other specialized forms of investment without crippling the country economically. The bank with its wider latitude in making safe investments is the hub of the economic wheel and the enlargement of the savings bank hub forecasts the return of better distribution of savings to deserving enterprises."

WHEN RATS ARE USEFUL

Ever since the days of the Pied Piper, who, according to the German legend, lured the rats of Hamelin into the river Weser, mankind has waged war on these destructive and disease-spreading rodents. Now, however, the scientist has found a use for this animal, which through its employment in research is contributing to the health of human beings.

Some interesting results from experimenting with rats are reported by Dr. Helen S. Mitchell, director of nutrition research at Battle Creek Sanitarium. She has just concluded feeding tests designed to correct the dietary errors of the Labrador natives among whom Sir Wilfred T. Grenfell, famed medical missionary, has labored for so many years.

Rats fed only liver developed acute kidney inflammation, but were brought back to health through a change in diet. Anemia was produced by feeding the rats only milk, which is deficient in iron, but the addition of inorganic iron solution soon made them well again. The sanitarium laboratory, which has a wide reputation for its anemia research work, has also brought to light many other facts which have proved valuable in the treatment of human diseases at the institution.

One great beneficiary of these experiments with rats is the babies of the country, for many of the diseases of childhood result from improper feeding. As Dr. Mitchell has expressed it, "the rat in the laboratory cage has revealed the correct diet for the infant in its cradle."

EFFECT OF STIMULANTS

For many years scientists have carried on experiments with a view to determining with some exactness just what are the effects of various stimulants on the human system. These experiments have not been confined to alcoholic beverages but have included investigations of the effects of such milder stimulants as tobacco, coffee and tea.

Prof. Norman W. Lyle of the psychological department of Columbia University recently conducted an exhaustive series of tests devoted to the effects of coffee on his subjects, the results of which have been made public.

As may have been expected, all the subjects tested did not show the same reactions, but the results were sufficiently uniform to warrant some general conclusions, which also agree quite closely with those of Professors Hoefler and Hardy.

It was found that while some were steadied by drinking coffee, others experienced cold hands and feet, palpitation of the heart and nervousness. Also it was noted that while coffee drinkers showed greater speed in certain work, they suffered in accuracy, and that those who drank decaffeinated coffee or none at all maintained a higher average of steadiness than those who drank ordinary coffee. Another conclusion was that persons of low intelligence were not so much affected by coffee as those more intelligent and high-strung.

THE FARMER'S WARFARE

While farming is apparently the most peaceful of pursuits, in reality the farmer is everlastingly at war. Not with his fellowmen, but with the billions of insects and other animal life which menace his crops on every hand.

Unfortunately, the farmer is in most cases poorly equipped to carry on this incessant warfare effectively. The boll weevil, the army worm, the corn borer, the gypsy moth, the cabbage butterfly and other hordes of insects and parasites are working day and night to set his best efforts at naught. And each of these pests presents a distinct problem.

In this warfare, as in warfare among human beings, science must be brought into action in order to secure the desired results. Without scientific aid in fighting the pests which menace the farmer's crops, it is asserted by high authorities that in time human life would become extinct. The insects and parasites would completely overrun the earth.

It is some comfort to know, then, that under the auspices of the Department of Agriculture, earnest scientists are working diligently to find better means of controlling these pests, and are meeting with a fair degree of success.

Information of the utmost value to the farmer is available through the county farm agents, bulletins from government sources, articles by experts published in the press, and the example of informed neighbors. He owes it to himself to profit by this information and co-operate with these agencies which stand ready to aid him in his warfare against destructive insect pests.

As another measure of farm relief, violin chin rests were placed on the free list.

If the statesmen would stop worrying so much about the next war it might be less likely to happen.

In at least one respect Alabama is the luckiest state. Its legislature meets only once in four years.

A WORLD RADIO CENTER

Plans recently made public by Rockefeller interests contemplate for New York City the greatest amusement enterprise the world has ever seen, with radio as its central feature.

This stupendous project will represent an investment of $250,000,000—a quarter of a billion—and will cover three whole blocks in the vicinity of Fifth avenue and Forty-eighth street. There will rise four magnificent temples of art—a variety theatre, a sound-film theatre, a musical comedy theatre, and a house for regular drama—with a combined seating capacity of 25,000.

Performances from all of these will be broadcast to the nation and to the world by radio, and means will be provided for utilizing all developments of television as they appear.

In connection with this majestic art center will be a grand plaza, of which it is said by the promoters "no effort will be spared to make it the most impressive boulevard of its kind in the world; fountains, statuary and beautiful garden plots will intersperse its whole extent."

Provision will be made underground for streets, bus terminals and parking space, and all deliveries to the "radio city" will be made from this underground area, so that the surface traffic problem may be reduced to a minimum. Work is to be begun this fall and completed in 1933.

All this is of the greatest significance not only to those who may visit New York, but to everyone who owns a radio set. This may be understood from the announcement that the National Broadcasting Company will operate twenty-seven broadcasting studios in the radio city, instead of only eight as at present, offering better programs of greater variety.

Agitation against printing crime news continues. But crime ceased to be news long ago.

6 PER CENT INCREASE IN AUTO OWNERSHIP

Mid-year registrations of motor vehicles in California were shown in a report released last Wednesday by Frank G. Snook, chief of the Division of Motor Vehicles, to have increased approximately 6 per cent, or 108,489, over the same period of a year ago.

The report gives total fee-paid registrations for the six months period ending June 30 at 1,968,012. This does not include vehicles owned by public service corporations and political subdivisions on which no fees are paid, which, if counted, would bring the grand total beyond the 2,000,000 mark.

Fee-paid registrations for the six months period follow: Passenger cars, 1,830,096; solid tired trucks, 14,539; pneumatic tired trucks, 73,853; motorcycles, 8,182; solid tired trailers, 8,821; pneumatic tired trailers, 32,521. Net fees will total well above six million dollars, it was announced, after all expenses for operating the division and the California highway patrol have been deducted. This sum will be distributed to the counties and the State Highway Commission for expenditure on the roads of the state, thus indirectly returning the fees paid by the motorist in the form of better highways.

The gain in pleasure cars alone was in excess of 90,000. Motorcycles have reversed their ratios of several years and shown a slight tendency to gain.

As in previous years, Los Angeles county was responsible for more than one-third of all registrations. The southern county alone registered more than three-quarters of a million passenger cars.

Keeping the Senate over for a special session will not go so hard with the solons so long as Walter Johnson's Washington team keeps up its winning streak.

SAFETY FIRST!

Ever since the dawn of civilization, mankind has faced dangers. Primitive people were in constant fear of wild beasts. They studied the ways of animals and protected themselves from this danger as best they could.

Today we face not FEWER dangers than our ancestors of thousands of years ago—but MORE. These continually mounting dangers are largely covered by one word—accidents.

The great inventions that have brought joy, happiness and comfort, have also brought a multiplication of dangers. Railroads, automobiles, aeroplanes, gas, electricity, gasoline, firearms—all of these have increased the possibility of accidents.

The only accident that does not carry with it a financial loss or physical injury is the accident that does not happen.

With accidental losses mounting into millions of dollars; and over one hundred thousand lives annually (in spite of the fact that more than one-half of all accidents are preventable), it is time for every man, woman and child to cooperate in reducing accidents.

Inasmuch as we cannot entirely escape from this danger of accidents, it behooves everyone of us to learn how to guard against them. The first principle of citizenship in our town should be SAFETY FIRST.

The primary duty of any community as well as any government is to make its people safe. Police, fire and health protection are three of the most important functions of any civic government. This protection is very limited unless it has the cooperation of every citizen.

Carelessness, neglect and recklessness are the factors that contribute largely to the accidents that continue to occur in the home, store and factory; on the farm and highway. Safety first, universally practiced, would eliminate nearly every accident.

Traffic accidents are the principal danger to safety so far as the community is directly concerned. Nearly one-third of all traffic accidents happen to children under 15 years of age. Safety first, practiced by automobile drivers and pedestrians; safety first, taught to our children in the schools, would greatly reduce traffic accidents.

Fire loss is another great safety hazard. At least sixty per cent of all fires are preventable. Fire not only burns property, it stops business, throws people out of employment. It causes poverty! Inspect your property for fire hazards and eliminate them; make property safe for yourself and others.

Fire insurance, while the only reasonable and complete protection against loss by fire, covers only actual financial loss of the property burned. Regardless of the insurance carried, it is a duty to one's self, and one's neighbors, and to the community, to prevent fire.

Failure to provide proper fireproof storage for your perishable goods, and safe deposit boxes for your valuables, makes for lack of safety. Bank vaults and fireproof storage houses furnish the maximum of safety at a minimum of cost.

Night and day your police and firemen maintain a vigil to keep you and yours safe. But even with their utmost efforts, your cooperation is necessary. A community is disgraced by fatal traffic accidents and by excessive fire loss.

National Safety Week should be 365 days long in our community.

Safety First! CERTAINLY we'll all practice it—and preach it too in

DALY CITY NOTES

Mrs. R. P. Richardson, of Acton street, is entertaining as her house guest Miss Merville Camico, of Stockton.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Enzlin and son Ralph, of San Francisco, and Miss Isabella Hart, of Los Banos avenue, returned last Sunday from the Russian river, where they spent a most enjoyable vacation.

Don't forget the whist to be given by Hillcrest Circle, U. A. O. D., in Masonic Hall, on Monday evening, July 28. Mrs. Victorine Bernardi is the chairlady in charge and assures all who attend a nice time.

Mrs. A. Vireno and daughters Ester and Mabel and son Andy, of Mission street, accompanied by Mrs. B. Ottoni, have just returned from a most delightful vacation spent at Guerneville, on the Russian river.

Mrs. J. H. Durrfer, of San Diego avenue, entertained at luncheon at her home on Wednesday, the guests who enjoyed her hospitality being Mrs. Brockhurst, Mrs. Ellen Logan, Mrs. A. Hansen and Mrs. George Felsch.

Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Richardson, of Acton street, entertained the Misses Merville Camico, of Stockton, Alice and Bernice Dooley, of San Francisco, last Wednesday at a dinner party. A most enjoyable evening was spent in playing games after the dinner.

El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, N. D. G. W., will hold a whist party on Wednesday evening, August 20, in Masonic Temple, to which all who enjoy a good game of whist are invited. President Frieda Schade and the officers of the Parlor are in charge and have promised an evening of enjoyment.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Shaw, of Shakespear street, announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Marie Shaw, to Mr. Thomas J. Lone. The wedding ceremony will take place on August 2 in Our Lady of Perpetual Help church. Miss Shaw is very popular with the younger set and has a large circle of friends who will wish her much happiness.

The last meeting and social of La Fiesta Club was held at the home of the Misses Margie and Tessie O'Connor, on Evergreen avenue. After the regular meeting, conducted by Miss Audrey Diamond, president, and Miss Margie O'Connor, secretary, the young ladies enjoyed dancing and games, later a dainty supper being served to the following members: Roberta Heagney, Collista Dalton, Edna Boyle, Elsie Fahy, Lorraine Wall, Nonie Healey, Louise Clemens, Annette Lucey, Margaret Kennedy, Audrey Diamond, Tessie and Margie O'Connor.

EL CARMELO PARLOR OFFICERS INSTALLED

El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, Native Daughters of the Golden West, held public installation of officers last Wednesday evening in the Masonic Temple. The installing officers was District Deputy Grand President Mrs. Rena Matias, she being assisted by Mrs. Matilda Heeringa, Mrs. Margaret Steele and Miss Dolores Baron, Past Presidents of El Carmelo Parlor.

President Frieda Schade extended a cordial welcome to all present and introduced guests of honor, including Supervising District Deputy Grand President of San Mateo county, Mrs. Ida Mesquiti, and District Deputy Grand President Mrs. Rena Matias El Carmelo Parlor.

Speeches of congratulation and good wishes from many present was followed by a program and dancing.

Gifts were presented to Past President Florence Hopman, who was commended upon the completion of a splendid term; President Frieda Schade, and Deputy District Grand President Rena Matias.

The officers installed were: Past President, Florence Hopman; President, Frieda Schade; First Vice-president, Laura Figoni; Second Vice-president, Collista Dalton; Third Vice-president, Evelyn Mohr; Financial Secretary, Christine Hume; Treasurer, Josie Poe; Recording Secretary, Hattie Kelly; Marshal, Alice Anderson; Trustees, Mary May, Fredereka Volkman, Anne Biggio; Inside Sentinel, Ethel Anderson; Outside Sentinel, Julia Romer.

Threatened mob violence was abruptly quelled down Beaumont, Texas, way a few days ago by a doughty limb of the law. Sheriff W. W. Covington landed a well-timed wallop to the jaw of the self-appointed mob leader, whose followers became his leaders in getting out of the jail yard.

If Judge Joseph Sabbath runs for mayor of Chicago, as his friends are urging him to do, he ought to get off to a flying start. He speaks nine languages and belongs to twenty-two lodges, clubs and other organizations. Then he has divorced 35,000 couples, which ought to give him 70,000 votes.

INCREASED PAYROLL SHOWN BY ELECTRIC COMPANY

Depression has not halted the building activities of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company. Its payroll is larger than it was a year ago. In May, the last month for which reports are available, the company's payroll was $2,124,000, or $520,000 more than for the same month in 1929. The number of employees was 14,242, an increase of 3,761 over May 1929.

"The payroll of this company for the year," said A. F. Hockenbeamer, president of the company, "will run in excess of $25,000,000—more than $2,000,000 a month for every month in the year. We have not halted in a single undertaking in our program of building for the future. We are going right along with our dam, power houses and ditches on our Salt Springs project on the Mokelumne river and there will be no let up on this project until it is finished in 1931 or 1932. Work on our steam-electric plant in San Francisco is likewise moving ahead with full crews at work, under orders to get the first of two large steam turbines ordered for that station into operation this fall. Our natural gas program is being carried on as laid out last year and the year before and construction crews are now building in to Napa, Sonoma and Marin counties, which will be supplied with natural gas before the end of September. Extensions, gas and electric, are going ahead in every city and town where there is demand for them.

"California is too large and rich a state to be permanently affected by any slowing up of business. Depressions here can never be more than temporary. Business will turn upward as quickly as it turned downward and, when it turns upward, the Pacific Gas and Electric Company intends to be ready with additional facilities to take care of it. When the up-swing comes there will be immediate demand for more power in shops and factories and for more natural gas as fuel in our industries. Our aim is to be prepared."

The figures given by Mr. Hockenbeamer for the Pacific Gas and Electric Company do not include the Great Western Power Company or the San Joaquin Light and Power Corporation, recently acquired. Development work on the properties of these companies is likewise going ahead according to program. No changes are taking place, except where consolidations of offices and departments are necessary to effect economies in operation.

According to Mr. Hockenbeamer, the whole state benefits in the building program of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company. "Our employees," he said, "all live in Northern and Central California. There are none outside of the state. All their earnings go in circulation in this section. Wages and salaries go into stores and shops or into investments in homes, real property or securities. Everyone in the community benefits, from the grocer and the butcher to banks and insurance companies."

Everett Law is another illustration of the fact that weak men have strong moments, and vice versa. He won praise for his heroic work in rescuing twenty-eight fellow inmates from the Ohio penitentiary fire some weeks ago and was shortly afterward given his freedom. Now he has been convicted of robbing a filling station in Michigan.

Although his funeral would not compare in grandeur with that of a prosperous racketeer, Louis A. Thiel, a Chicago artist, had seventy-six official mourners at his obsequies. Few, if any, tears were shed, but each mourner received $20 for his services, from a fund left by Thiel for the purpose.

NATIONAL FORESTS SET NEW REVENUE RECORD

The eighteen national forests of the California region, U. S. Forest Service, established a new highwater mark in receipts when they returned to the Federal Treasury, from the use and sale of natural resources, a total of $1,647,360 in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, according to report by Regional Forester S. B. Shaw. This total is an increase of $228,221 over the receipts from the previous fiscal year, and marks a 123 per cent gain in business for the California Region in the past decade.

The sale of mature and over ripe timber from the Federal forests yielded $1,195,664 of the total; grazing fees for cattle and sheep using national forest ranges, $212,930; special and recreational uses, largely rented summer home and resort sites, $136,496; water power development, $79,112.

As national forests lands and resources in California are non-taxable, the Federal Government, under existing laws, will return 25 per cent of the receipts, or approximately $410,000 to the state for distribution to counties in which the forests are located, for road and school development work. The Federal Service will also spend an additional 10 per cent of the receipts, or $165,000, on roads and trails in these same counties, making a grand total to California from the national forests of $575,000. This cash return to and expenditure in the state is in addition to some two and one-half million dollars spent by the Forest Service on state, interstate and county highway systems within and adjacent to the forests, and for the protection and management of the national forests.

REWARD EFFICIENT, FAITHFUL SERVICE

Promotion comes as a reward for efficient and faithful efforts in private business. Governmental divisions, such as our own county, should not lag too far behind in according similar recognition to work ably done.

In a few weeks the men and women of this county will be going to the polls again. Not the least of their opportunities on that eventful day will be that of casting ballots for Elizabeth M. Kneese for the office of County Clerk. No one can gainsay that if our extremely popular County Clerk had devoted her talents in other directions than that of giving the public her services, she would have gone high indeed.

County Clerk Kneese has a busy day of it each twenty-four hour period of the week, and the immense amount of work accomplished in her office is hard to realize on account of the smooth manner in which it is done. As do all successful leaders in any kind of activity in life, the County Clerk gives credit, and plenty of it, to her office force. It is easy to see, however, her supervising hand in every move.

ELIZABETH M. KNEESE

The popular official attends all meetings of the Board of Supervisors, and also personally takes care of the duties devolving upon her as Clerk of the Superior Court.

She shows a verve in discharging her manifold duties that is contagious, and as scores of taxpayers have said, Her presence in the Court House is "all to the good."

There is a knack in dealing with people who happen to have business at the county building, and the possession of that knack to the highest degree makes all the callers have the kindest feeling toward the County Clerk. As has been admitted on all sides, not a single criticism has been directed at the office.

Judge Buck commends County Clerk Kneese; leading members of the bar of San Francisco and San Mateo counties have sent unsolicited endorsements of her candidacy; and electors galore have come forward with offers of support for the primary election.

The magnetism that has won the County Clerk legion of supporters in her own county is of good effect even far beyond its borders. She has been honored each year by the County Clerks' Association of California by being elected secretary of that organization.

A high percentage of the thirty thousand registration is confidently expected to vote on August 26, and among the victors "sweeping the county like a tidal wave," as the old-timers might put it, certainly will be Elizabeth M. Kneese.

Guy Coon, assistant superintendent of the Daly City Municipal Water Company, left last Monday on his vacation, being accompanied by Elmer Kennedy.

The following application for marriage license was filed in San Francisco last Saturday: R. H. Viotti, 20, of 98 Templeton avenue, and Eva R. Menconi, 19, of 3253 Steiner street, San Francisco.
